

Important Information Regarding the AEI Transfer On Death (TOD) Beneficiary Plan

In order to participate in the AEI TOD Beneficiary Plan (the Plan), you must own units or interests in an AEI Fund individually or jointly (such as Tenants in Common, Joint Tenants w/Rights of Survivorship, or Joint Tenants by the Entirety). Trusts, qualified plans (such as IRAs and 401ks) and other forms of ownership registration are not eligible to participate in the Plan. Please note that designations under the Plan pertain to interests in all AEI Funds that you may hold within a single registration at the time of your death.

IMPORTANT

If the Plan conflicts with instructions set forth in your will, personal trust or other estate planning documents, the designation(s) under the Plan will prevail, by law. You are advised to consult tax and estate planning professionals as the Plan may not be appropriate for your particular needs. AEI does not provide legal, tax or estate planning advice.

You may change the beneficiary(ies) under the Plan at any time, however, designation(s) become irrevocable upon your death.

Not all states recognize the Uniform TOD Security Registration Act. Please see the attached list of states that do honor the uniform TOD registration provisions.

START WITH PROFESSIONAL ADVICE

We urge you to consult with legal, tax and/or estate advisors before you complete and execute the attached Plan. Your ownership registration(s) will pass directly to your beneficiary(ies) exactly as you designate in the Plan. This is true even if you have made other beneficiary designations in your will, personal trust documents, or other estate planning documents. If the Plan beneficiary designations conflict with other estate planning documents, you could, inadvertently:

- Transfer your AEI ownership interests counter to intended estate planning goals
- Subject your estate to additional tax and expense
- Leave insufficient resources to pay estate taxes and debt

HOW THE PLAN WORKS

The Plan is an efficient way to designate beneficiaries to inherit your AEI ownership interests. You retain control of the ownership interests during your lifetime. Upon death, ownership transfers directly, avoiding probate. You may easily add or change the beneficiary(ies), or revoke or amend the Plan at any time by providing written instruction to AEI. The designation instructions under the Plan will not be implemented upon the death of only one joint owner. If you wish to transfer ownership upon your death to someone other than the existing joint owner, please re-register the ownership interest to yourself and the existing joint owner as individuals. Once accomplished, beneficiary designation(s) may be made for each individual ownership interest.

If you do not desire to designate beneficiaries under this Plan, please complete the AEI Survivorship Contact Form, which may be downloaded from AEI's website or provided to you by contacting the AEI Investor Services Department.

IS TOD REGISTRATION RIGHT FOR YOU?

Although the Plan offers a straightforward method to transfer ownership upon death, it is useful only if your estate planning needs are minimal or when the TOD registration instructions pertain to assets that are not addressed within your will or estate plan. The Plan will control how AEI re-registers your ownership interest(s) upon your death. For instance, if you bequeath your entire estate to your three children in equal shares, and under the Plan you designate one child as beneficiary to inherit your AEI ownership interest(s), AEI will re-register the interest(s) in the name of the one child designated. If you desire that inherited assets be used only for specific purposes, or that your heirs receive assets only when they reach a specified age, you are advised to consult an estate planning attorney to ensure that your final wishes are carried out as you intend.

NOTE: THIS TOD PLAN IS LEGALLY BINDING WITH RESPECT TO YOUR AEI INVESTMENT AND SUPERSEDES ANY OTHER BENEFICIARY DESIGNATIONS THAT MAY BE SET FORTH IN ESTATE PLANNING DOCUMENTS.
